

Title on
THE IMPACT OF SPLITS IN NATIONAL POLITICAL PARTIES ON
STATE POLITICS: A CASE STUDY OF KARNATAKA

Sridhar Hadimani
Research Student

under the Guidance of
Dr. Hiregoudar G.C
Professor (Rtd) M.A. PhD.

Department Of Political Science
Karnataka University, Dharwad

Introduction:

India is country of many cultures. This is a holy land of many religions, a secular nation of many castes and a very big democratic country which has a view of unity in diversity the concept of democracy is a much valued fact in the political life of the modern human. Since the present modern democracy is a government for the welfare of the people, political parties are very much essential and compulsory to collect the feelings, desires, and opinions of the people and to fulfill the demands and needs of the people and to give them the political education. These political parties have a close relationship with the state institutions and civil society. In every country, the birth, decline, split and alliance of the parties will be occurring generally on the basis of political, social, economical, religion, cultural, geographical and diversified theoretical basis related to the personal matters. In the democracy system an existence or a fall of a Government depends much on the political Since India was under British Administration for a long time, British introduced their parliamentary institution in India step by step. The Constituent Assembly considered the experience of Indians during the rule of the British and decided that a Parliamentary Government of the British model was suitable for India. Because of that Parliamentary Governments exist in the center and States of India. Parliamentary Government depends on the majority of the votes. When the national political parties are split in the state level or in the national level it is create a lot of constitutional crisis its direct impact to government.

Like this, split in the national parties create confusion in the people. A party moves towards the split by the rebellion in the party by some members for their personal interests and by the internal disputes because of the scarcity of a single mindedness between its members. By the split, a party with complete majority will have to lose its power without completing the tenure. By this, there will be confusion to the common people and to the party workers and it becomes a reason for the elections again and again. It becomes to face the constitutional crisis in the State by the split of the national parties. We see the instability of the Government only with this.

A stage of impossible to undertake good governance and pro people developmental works will arise and the development of the State declines. Not only that, but, people will have to face the inevitable circumstances of changing the faith in some party. And on a day in future, people may not support a national party. When the national parties are split in the state level or in the national level it is impossible that it cannot stay away without making impact on the politics of the State. This is a study on the impacts on the State politics.